Take le Tour de Scarborough

EVENTS

Inaugural ride aims to show 'cycling isn't just for downtown'

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

Scarborough is on the move, and doing it on two wheels.

The first-ever Tour de Scarborough takes place this Saturday, a 35-kilometre ride that will take nearly 100 cyclists on a historical tour of the east-end suburb. It's part of an ongoing strategy to spread cycling culture outside the downtown core.

"This is our own way of celebrating Canada 150," said Scarborough Cycles project co-ordinator Marvin Macaraig, who helped organize the event. "It's definitely going to be fun. There's a lot to see in Scarborough, and we want to show people that cycling isn't just for downtown."

Organized in partnership with U of T Scarborough's sustainability office and the Scarborough Historical Society, the event also coincides with the suburb's 221st birthday. Riders will stop at various sites to learn about the neighbourhoods' history — and catch their breath.

A similar but shorter 20-kilometre tour took place back in 2015 as the Toronto Centre for Active Transportation launched its Complete Street Forum.

Much has changed since, including the opening of two bike hubs, the introduction of bike-share programs and the organization of multiple bike workshops.

The tour is also an opportunity to highlight challenges that cyclists face in the suburbs, from speeding cars to a lack of properly built bike lanes.

As Toronto moves forward with a 10-year cycling plan, Macaraig said it's important to ensure cyclists from the city's outskirts are not forgotten.

"There are some good plans in place, but bike infrastructure in Scarborough is still lacking," he said.

"This is a conversation that we must continue to have with the city and policymakers."

Another reason to cycle

Time to reap what you sowed.

The latest incentive for Toronto cyclists comes in the form of an app that tracks movement and exchanges points for goods and services at participating businesses.

Biko first launched in Bogota back in 2015 as part of a one-month campaign to encourage people to choose bikes over cars. But its immediate success has seen the app become popular in cities such as Mexico City, Cartagena, Vancouver and now Toronto.

For each kilometre travelled by bicycle, the app user gets one point — a biko. In Toronto, 10 bikos can be exchanged for a free cold brew at Jimmy's Coffee, and 60 bikos will get the user a free six-pack at Amsterdam Brewing.

As many as 19 businesses have signed up for the partnership.

"Our goal at Biko is to improve the quality of life in cities by expanding the bicycling revolution, getting people on their bikes to reduce the number of vehicles on the road," wrote co-founder Emilio Pombo in an email to Metro.

More information can be found at bikoapp.com.

Police questioning wrong man: Lawyer

BELIZE

Suspect held over Canadian woman's death a 'close' friend

The girlfriend and lawyer of a Canadian who has been questioned in connection with the murders of a Canadian-American couple in Belize say that police are focusing on the wrong person.

Canadian Francesca Matus, 52, and American Drew DeVoursney, 36, were found strangled in a sugarcane field in Belize's northern Corozal district May 1.

Police have detained and questioned several people in relation to the murders including 54-year-old Canadian John Deshaies, who rented and lived in the basement of Matus' house in Corozal.

Deshaies, who works in construction, is also currently in custody facing charges of theft and possession of stolen property in relation to $50,000 worth of electronics that were taken from a casino in the south Belizean town of Placencia in March. He has not been charged in relation to the murders.

Francesca Matus and her boyfriend Drew DeVoursney were found strangled in a sugarcane field in Belize on May 1. CONTRIBUTED

"Our client maintains his innocence with respect to both matters," Deshaies' lawyer Estevan Perera told Torstar News Service, adding that Deshaies intends to apply for bail Friday.

Speaking from Belize, Jasmine Lizarraga, who says she is Deshaies girlfriend, said he lived with Matus for about two years and were "very close" friends.

"Francesca didn't have no problems with John, John didn't have no problems with Francesca," Lizarraga said. "John, he is innocent. He didn't do this."

Deshaies was out of town when Matus disappeared, Lizarraga said, but returned to Corozal to help with the search efforts. She and Deshaies left for San Ignacio, in west Belize, a few days later, but then got a call from a friend saying police had found the bodies and wanted to talk to them.

Lizarraga said she and Deshaies went to the police station in Belize's capital, Belmopan, to give their statements.

"He told the cops everything that he knew … the cops didn't believe him, they detained both of us and since then, the cops think that he had something to do with it and they have him as a suspect," Lizarraga said.

Lizarraga also said the theft charges against Deshaies are unfounded, explaining that he was an employee of the casino and had been told to remove the electronics so they could be used at another location.

Deshaies is doing "terrible," Lizarraga added.

"I can't take clothing for him, he's still got the same clothing from the day they arrested him," she said. "I don't want to go back to (Matus's) house … I'm afraid to go there right now, I don't want nothing do to with that, so I can't go and get clothes for him."

Restaurant patrons split on benefits surcharge

Increasingly tight profit margins have restaurant owners seeking creative ways to compensate staff, but one Toronto eatery's small surcharge to help pay for health and dental benefits has customers split.

The owners of Emma's Country Kitchen recently announced they would include an optional three per cent surcharge on customers' cheques to go toward benefits for full-time workers. They argued the fee — which would amount to less than 50 cents on the average bill — would be more transparent than raising prices.

> Why might we not patronize a company that provides benefits?
> Mike von Massow

"Instead of taking responsibility they are just downloading it to their customers," Karen Hanna wrote on the restaurant's Facebook page, while Jeff Herrle countered, "Wow, truly remarkable commitment to a laudable ideal … and for this to happen in a time when many employers are contributing to the problem of precarious work under the auspices of 'savings' and 'competitiveness.' Well done!!!"

Server Agnes Ramos, who has worked at the brunch diner since September, is cheering the idea.

"I've been serving since I was 18 and I've never been able to receive benefits so it's a great idea. I totally support it," says the 27-year-old, who won't be able to take advantage of the plan until she increases her hours from part-time.

Ramos was on her mother's benefits plan until a few years ago.

"Now that I don't receive benefits I'm less likely to go to the dentist or get my eyes checked."

While some customers may gripe about the paying the surcharge, others could see value in a company that provides benefits, says Mike von Massow, a professor in the department of food, agriculture and resource economics at the University of Guelph.

Mother of two remembered as 'a role model'

Francesca Matus was a confident businesswoman and lifelong student, but above all a dedicated mother, according to friends and family who gathered Thursday at a Richmond Hill funeral home.

Matus was a 52-year-old mother of twin boys, Alexander and Jason, and shared a close bond with the rest of her family, including her mother, brother and sister-in-law and her nephew, said her close friend Nikki-Monique Kurnath.

"She did anything and everything for her two sons," Kurnath said. "She took care of them, she would support them. Her goals of being financially secure, to help be able to take care of them, was her priority.

"She always put them first."

In eulogies, friends of Matus described her "radiant smile" and "contagious laugh." They said she "exuded confidence" yet was always eager to learn something new.

"Life was never boring with Francesca. Everything was an adventure. She would make the simplest tasks something more fun to do," said Kurnath.

Kurnath said she looked up to Matus, who like her, was a single mother.

"It's as if we were soul sisters," she said. "I thought of her as a big sister in a way, but also as a role model."

Four found guilty in Little Italy shooting death

Four men are guilty of first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit murder for the gangland-style shooting of John Raposo at a busy Little Italy café in 2012, a jury found Thursday afternoon after two days of deliberating. Nicola Nero, Martino Caputo and Rabih (Robby) Alkhalil were accused of hiring Dean Wiwchar to kill Raposo for being "the biggest rat in the world." They planned to keep Raposo's 200 kilo shipment of cocaine for themselves, splitting the proceeds three ways.

No medal for Olympic diversity

REPRESENTATION

U of T study finds Games' athletes are mostly white

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

A new study has found the Olympics to favour white and wealthy athletes. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Did you think you saw diversity when the likes of Simone Biles and Andre De Grasse were collecting medals in Rio?

Here's a shocker for you: Olympics are still so white.

That's according to a new study from the University of Toronto, the findings of which were just published in the journal Public Health. It's the first-ever comprehensive study looking at race representation in the Games on the individual athlete level.

While the charter governing both the summer and winter Olympics stipulates that everyone should be able to compete without discrimination, numbers from the two recent competitions suggest otherwise.

Researcher and physician David Lawrence analyzed data for the 2014 Sochi Winter Games and 2016 Rio Summer Games, with a focus on Canada, the U.S.A., Great Britain and Australia.

A whopping 94.9 per cent of athletes from those nations at the Sochi Olympics were white, while the number stood at 81.7 per cent in Rio last year.

"The disproportional representation in the summer sports was surprising to me," said Lawrence, who teaches at U of T's faculty of kinesiology and physical education.

Most sports selected for the Winter Games (hockey, ski and ice dancing, for example) are derived from Euro-Centric cultures, but one would expect more diversity in the Summer Games, he said.

> I want to start an honest discussion.
> David Lawrence

Access to wealth is also another factor, as about one-third of Olympic athletes are privately educated and trained, according to the study.

The Canadian Olympic Committee did not immediately respond to Metro's questions on what's being done to increase diversity.

Lawrence hopes his research will help inform policymakers on breaking barriers to sports participation and advancement. More funding to improve physical activity, recreational facilities and public programming in marginalized ethnic communities could be one of the solutions, but further research is needed, he said.

"I want to start an honest discussion about the value we place on Olympic sports, and see if we can change something," he said.

More than a job. Think career. Think ownership.

‘Not just for gamers’

TECHNOLOGY

Newly opened venue offers virtual reality experience

Jonah Brotman stands in a VR booth with controllers and headset. BERNARD WEIL/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Virtual reality: heard of it, never experienced it.

That’s the case for most people. So to fill the gap, there is the newly opened House of VR on Queen St. W., at Bathurst St. A handful of arcades around the city offer VR games, but this new storefront offers a wide range of games and experiences in a large space — and aimed at a slightly different demographic.

“We’re trying to be a central hub for art, tech and culture,” says Jonah Brotman, 32, who founded the business with his brother Noah, who also works as an urban planner, and his longtime girlfriend Stephanie Payne, a visual artist.

“We’re not just for gamers, we’re for everyone,” adds in Payne.

While Brotman has already launched three previous businesses, this is his first retail venture — and the first project with family. “The reality of life as a serial entrepreneur is you are often working on several projects at the same time.”

This is different. Bricks-and-mortar ventures take a lot more face time, so the trio are putting in 12-hour days (Noah juggles his day job too) and have been since before the May 6 grand opening (attended by more than 200 people). “We’ve been all-in on this,” says Brotman. “It’s been a fun process to put all your energy into one project.”

Groups book into these spaces by the hour, sharing time on the unit itself and watching each other engage with the games and adventures. Cozy pods on both floors — and the super cozy pillow lounge facing the front windows — offer a place for individuals to snap on a Samsung Gear VR headset and view 360-degree films (including one where you’re immersed in a Cirque du Soleil show).

They charge hourly: $20 for a headset, $55 for a virtual reality unit and $75 for a mixed reality unit. The units accommodate up to four people.

The walls are lined with art. That includes murals by Payne, but also pieces by artists that will change monthly. Right now, you can see digital works by Jay Tripper on the first floor. The bathrooms are mini art installations themselves.

House of VR will close to walk-in guests when the team rents the space out for events. All the units are modular and can be pushed to the walls or out of the space entirely, leaving plenty of space for large groups. From Augmented Reality works on the walls (look through an app on your phone and the piece changes) to a dichroic glass second floor window (it changes colour depending on the time of day and your angle) there’s a lot to see here. Most of it is stuff you can’t see elsewhere. And technology in this field is changing so rapidly, there’s likely going to be something different on hand soon enough.

“Virtual reality is such a new technology,” says Brotman. “The future is so exciting.”

ARTS

Comic enthusiasts to take over library

Ali Vanderkruyk
Metro | Toronto

The lineup at the 2017 Toronto Comic Arts Festival (TCAF) does not disappoint.

Hundreds of artists from around the world will provide live readings, interviews, panels, workshops, gallery shows and a massive vendor fair. Here are 3 artists to look for this year:

Jesse Jacobs – Crawl Space (Koyama Press, 2017)

From his home in Hamilton, Jesse Jacobs is making a name for himself in Canadian comics. Crawl Space envisions a brightly saturated world where a group of kids retreat from mundane suburbia with creatures of the surrealist kind.

An Nguyen and Jane Mai – So Pretty/Very Rotten (Koyama Press, 2017)

Jane Mai (Brooklyn) and An Nguyen (Ottawa) delve into their relationship with the frilly and lacey Lolita subculture and Rococo-inspired fashion with this book of essays and comics that is both academic and intimate.

Patrick Kyle – Wowee Zonk Small Press Showcase

Patrick Kyle curates the small-press showcase Wowee Zonk with Chris Kuzma and Ginette Lapalme at TCAF.

EVENT INFO

The Toronto Comic Arts Festival runs from May 13-14 at the Toronto Reference Library and other venues around the Bloor/Yonge neighbourhood. It’s free to attend.

Tunnels get a makeover

SAFETY

TTC takes steps to keep cars out of streetcar stations

David Hains
Metro | Toronto

The TTC is putting the finishing touches on its master plan to idiot-proof its streetcar tunnels.

Construction workers slathered the ground in yellow and black paint on Thursday as yet another way to warn drivers that they should really, really not enter the streetcar tunnel on Queen's Quay.

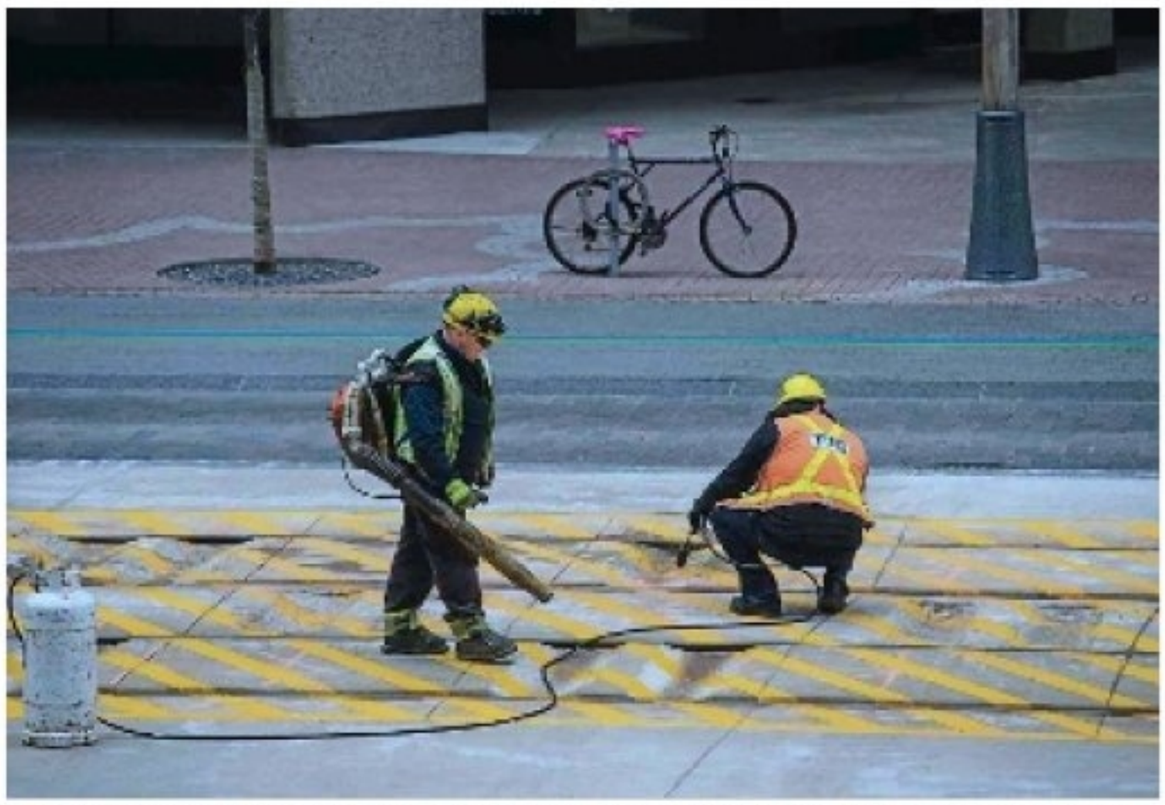
The gaudy zebra-stripe display is in addition to the many "do not enter" signs and lights that already line the entrance. But these warnings have proved insufficient for at least 22 drivers since 2014, resulting in high-profile transit delays ranging from 15 minutes to five hours.

The York and Queen's Quay streetcar tunnels feature raised rails and are not meant for cars. Prohibited vehicles usually get stuck, and removing them is an extensive process that can involve a dozen or more people.

Officials had to call in a special crane to remove a trapped car in February.

The driver, who was fined $425 after fleeing the scene, reportedly said he was just "following his GPS."

"Well, we never say never . . . but certainly the steps that we've taken are going to make it very difficult to accidentally drive down that tunnel," said TTC spokesperson Stuart Green last month after an initial batch of changes.



TTC workers paint black-and-yellow stripes on the tracks leading to the Queen's Quay station tunnel to alert drivers on Thursday. EDUARDO LIMA/METRO

> The steps that we've taken are going to make it very difficult to accidentally drive down that tunnel.
> Stuart Green

In addition to the bumblebee pattern on the ground, the TTC's plan included lowering the pole lights on both side of the entrance, installing a flashing light on a black-and-yellow-striped pole, adding even more signs and introducing rumble strips, which are indented grooves in the pavement designed to alert drivers through vibration.

The changes — hopefully the last — will be complete in about one week, said Green.

Metrolinx explores new option

Metrolinx has decided to order vehicles from another company in case Bombardier is unable to deliver trains for the Eglinton Crosstown on time.

According to sources familiar with the deal, Metrolinx has agreed to purchase cars from French manufacturer Alstom as a backup plan if Bombardier doesn't come through.

Metrolinx, the provincial transit agency for the GTA, signed a deal with Bombardier in 2010 to buy vehicles to run on the Eglinton Crosstown and other Toronto area lines. But the order has been bogged down by delays, and Bombardier has yet to deliver the first two pilot vehicles that were supposed to arrive in spring 2015.

Metrolinx has grown increasingly concerned that the Montreal-based company will be able to deliver the cars in time to open the Crosstown by 2021. The agency has said that if the opening is delayed it will be liable to pay the construction company building the line a penalty of up to $500,000 per day.

Why it's a good time to be a mom

Brandie Weikle
Torstar News Service

Kristen Bell, Mila Kunis and Kathryn Hahn in the film Bad Moms. Brandie Weikle says she's heard dozens, if not hundreds, of mothers label themselves as "bad moms," but she thinks they need to cut themselves some slack. CONTRIBUTED

Paid parental leave has gone from four months to six months to a year in the time between the 1970s and today.

"I'm such a bad mom."

It's a humble slag I've heard dozens — if not hundreds — of moms level against themselves as a preamble to some sort of confession that's not much of a confession at all.

"I'm such a bad mom. I let MacKenzie watch Paw Patrol on the iPad when I had the stomach flu."

"I'm such a bad mom. I was secretly glad when her team lost the hockey game so we didn't have to come back to the arena on Sunday morning."

We've established this by now: Our generation of parents is more plagued with self-doubt than any that's come before. We have an embarrassment of choice on everything from theories about infant sleep to where to send our kids to high school, and we get needlessly worked up over it all.

And it's no surprise given the keen sense we have that our choices are being closely monitored. After all, these are times when — even though the world is less dangerous than it was when we were growing up — your neighbour might call the Children's Aid Society if you let your kids walk to the playground by themselves. Add to this that we document and share our lives — or at least the highlight reels — through social media, and it's no wonder we engage in so much comparison, disparaging our own parenting before anyone beats us to the punch.

But despite all our insecurities, and the stresses we experience from trying to do too much, I still have to conclude that it is indeed a good time to be a mother. Here's why:

No more Mommy Wars

We've moved beyond — for the most part — tiresome conversations about whether it's the right decision for women to work outside the home. If you're engaging in so-called Mommy Wars over this question, you're way behind the times. It's about what works for your family and your circumstances. If you have any sort of choice whatsoever about whether or not to work, it's a privilege. Full stop.

Unprecedented opportunity

Yes, we've still got some work to do on the small matter of the 80 cents we're earning for every buck a man gets for the same work. But we've still got it far better than our moms, many of who can recall things like being asked for their husbands' signatures when they tried to open bank accounts. Today women outgraduate men from university. The glass ceiling still exists, but it's closer than it's ever been. We may find ourselves pumping breast milk in less-than-ideal surroundings in order to keep our standing in the workplace, but today it's not uncommon for women to be promoted before or even during a parental leave — and that just didn't happen before.

Technical helpers

While our smartphones create non-stop distractions that can be entirely crazy-making if we don't manage them mindfully, we've got convenience our predecessors couldn't have fathomed quite literally in our back jean pockets. With a few taps we can make a piano teacher, handyman or takeout dinner appear on our doorsteps. Access a math tutorial video for homework trouble. Pay the hydro bill, pick up a side hustle, register a kid for camp. Trade outgrown toys and clothes for a skateboard.

The key to being able to appreciate these advantages and enjoy our lives more lies in learning to trust our instincts, fret less about our choices and lean on each other. That's my Mother's Day wish for all.

Brandie Weikle is a parenting expert and the host of The New Family Podcast and editor of thenewfamily.com.

Brace for disasters more often: PM

Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard and Gatineau MP Steve McKinnon look on as PM Justin Trudeau speaks to media after a tour of a flooded area of Gatineau, Que. THE CANADIAN PRESS

CLIMATE CHANGE

Canada needs to build to be more 'resilient,' Trudeau says

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is sounding the alarm on the frequency and intensity of natural disasters in Canada, which have pushed Ottawa's bills for federal help to $360 million a year since 2011.

The numbers clearly suggest a dramatic escalation in the frequency and severity of natural calamities, a theme Trudeau echoed Thursday after embarking on a helicopter tour of flood-ravaged western Quebec.

"We're going to have to understand that bracing for a hundred-year storm is maybe going to happen every 10 years now or every few years," the prime minister said after his helicopter tour with Quebec Premier Philippe Couillard. "That means as we look to rebuild our communities, our homes, our infrastructures, we're going to have to think about what we can do to rebuild better, to rebuild in ways that are going to be more resistant, more resilient to the unpredictability we are now living."

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale also said Canadians will have to get used to climate change-fuelled disasters, and quickly — including by planning buildings and communities to minimize the risk of damage in the first place.

"The objective should be, rather than expecting to spend so much after the fact cleaning up, we should look for all of those opportunities to invest in mitigation and adaptation before the fact so that the losses will be minimized," Goodale said.

ELECTION 2019

Canadian spies look for election 'vulnerabilities'

The Communications Security Establishment has begun a promised review into the risks of foreign interference in the 2019 election, Torstar has learned.

CSE, Canada's signals intelligence and cyberdefence agency, is conducting a "risk assessment" into how vulnerable Canadian elections are to foreign hacking and information operations.

The Liberal ordered the review as the scope of Russian meddling in the 2016 U.S. presidential election was being made public by American intelligence agencies.

"CSE has been asked to provide a threat assessment of the cyber threat environment as it relates to the Canadian democratic process, including the electoral system," said Ryan Foreman, a spokesman for CSE.

In the U.S. and French presidential elections, Russian-backed hackers have been accused of releasing damaging information about candidates in support of rivals friendlier to the Kremlin.

Five things to know about Aeroplan's replacement

REWARDS

Airline parting ways with loyalty plan

Air Canada announced it plans to start an in-house loyalty program in 2020 and not renew its contract with Aimia Inc., which runs Aeroplan.

Here's what that means for Aeroplan members earning rewards for flying Air Canada:

An Air Canada plane flies underneath dark clouds above Frankfurt, Germany, on March 2. Air Canada said Thursday it will launch its own loyalty rewards plan in 2020 and not renew its contract with the company running Aeroplan, angering some points collectors. THE CANADIAN PRESS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

1 What happens to my Aeroplan points?

Nothing. Your Aeroplan balance remains intact. What changes is how you'll earn points after June 2020 and what you can buy with those points.

2 I've booked on Air Canada using Aeroplan points. What happens to my booking?

Members who have already booked flights with their Aeroplan points will still be able to travel as planned.

3 What points do I earn when I fly on Air Canada?

Until Air Canada's contract with Aimia expires in June 2020, miles earned for travel on Air Canada flights will be credited to travellers' Aeroplan accounts.

After that, travellers who fly on Air Canada will earn points towards the company's own loyalty program.

The same applies to travel on Air Canada's 26 Star Alliance partners, including Air China, Lufthansa and United.

4 Can I still use Aeroplan points to book Air Canada flights?

Members can use their Aeroplan points to book Air Canada and Star Alliance flights until June 30, 2020. Aimia says it won't stop offering flight rewards before then.

After that, the answer is unclear.

Air Canada said in a statement it intends to continue allowing Aeroplan members to redeem points for seats on Air Canada flights after that time.

However, Aimia CEO David Johnston said in an interview that isn't certain yet, as there's still lots of discussions to be had. He said the company continues to work on alternatives for after Air Canada leaves the program, including the possibility of new partners.

5 Does this change my Aeroplan credit card?

Three banks offer Aeroplan credit cards: TD, CIBC and American Express.

Those contracts expire in 2024, Johnston said, adding he's not worried those companies will choose to follow Air Canada's lead.

He said the majority of Aeroplan members earn points not through flying but rather through the dollars they spend shopping while using these affiliated cards. THE CANADIAN PRESS

UPSTATE NEW YORK

GOP freshman vilified over health-care vote

The patrons at the cafe next door want him out. A rival congressman has "adopted" his district. And more than a half dozen Democrats are preparing to run against him.

On the job little more than four months, Republican Rep. John Faso is facing a political firestorm in his own upstate New York backyard that threatens to consume his first term in Congress just as it begins.

The cause? He is among 217 Republicans who voted last week for a health-care bill that analysts say would cause 24 million people to lose insurance over the next decade, including tens of thousands of people in his rural district two hours north of New York City. Worse, critics say, the bill weakens protections for people with pre-existing conditions, even after Faso promised to safeguard coverage for such people in an emotional embrace — caught on video — with a seriously ill constituent.

> Whether or not he intended to lie and deceive his constituents, he did do that.
> Andrea Mitchell

"He hugged me and he promised he would take care of us," said Andrea Mitchell, a 35-year-old mother of two who has suffered multiple strokes and has a benign tumour in her brain.

"Whether or not he intended to lie and deceive his constituents, he did do that," she told The Associated Press this week. "I don't think there's any chance that Faso will be re-elected."

As a freshman in a swing district, Faso was a top Democratic target even before the health-care fallout. He is now considered one of the most vulnerable Republican incumbents in the nation as the GOP works to navigate the messy politics of an unpopular health-care plan 18 months before the midterm elections.

Faso defiantly defends his vote.

Trump concedes he lied about why he fired Comey

POLITICS

U.S. president abandons his rationale for the decision

Over and over, for two days, U.S. President Donald Trump, Vice-President Mike Pence and the rest of their administration said Trump fired FBI director James Comey only at the recommendation of a senior official in the Department of Justice.

Trump conceded Thursday that they were all lying.

Abandoning his entire public rationale for the stunning decision on Tuesday, Trump told NBC anchor Lester Holt that he was planning to fire Comey even before he met with Attorney General Jeff Sessions and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein.

"He's a showboat, he's a grandstander. The FBI has been in turmoil. You know that, I know that, everybody knows that," Trump told Holt in an interview.

His comments deepen the credibility crisis facing an administration that has made lying a habit. And they further call into question the democratic legitimacy of his decision to terminate the man in charge of an investigation into whether his campaign associates colluded with Russian meddling in the presidential election.

The administration had implausibly insisted that Trump had grown dismayed about Comey's unfair treatment of Hillary Clinton last year — that he was merely agreeing with the independent concerns Rosenstein expressed to him in a meeting on Monday and in a written memo.

In Trump's own letter to Comey, he said he was "accepting" a recommendation from Rosenstein and Sessions.

But Trump gave an entirely different explanation to Holt.

"I was going to fire Comey. My decision," he said. "It was not — I was going to fire Comey. There's no good time to do it, by the way."

In another remarkable revelation in the interview — for which there is no current proof — Trump said he asked Comey directly to tell him, if "possible," whether he is under investigation. Comey, he said, told him he is not. Anonymous Comey associates have told U.S. media outlets that Comey never told Trump he was not being investigated. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

No probe interference tolerated: Acting FBI chief

On the spot as the FBI's new acting director, Andrew McCabe assured senators Thursday he will alert them to any effort to interfere with the investigation into Russia's election meddling and possible ties with President Donald Trump's campaign.

Trump's firing of FBI director James Comey on Tuesday has led Democrats and others to raise concerns about the future of the investigation. But McCabe, speaking publicly for the first time since his former boss' ouster, said there has been "no effort to impede our investigation."

"You cannot stop the men and women of the FBI from doing the right thing," he said. He also said he would not inform the White House about developments in the probe.

Days before he was fired, Comey requested more resources to pursue his investigation, U.S. officials said, fuelling concerns that Trump was trying to undermine the probe. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COMMISSION

Executive order targets claims of voter fraud

President Donald Trump signed an executive order Thursday launching a commission to review alleged voter fraud and voter suppression, building upon his unsubstantiated claims that millions of people voted illegally in 2016.

The White House said the president's "Advisory Commission on Election Integrity" would examine allegations of improper voting and fraudulent voter registration in states and across the nation. The commission will report back to Trump by 2018.

Trump has alleged, without evidence, that three million to five million people voted illegally in his 2016 election against Democrat Hillary Clinton. He has vowed since the start of his administration to investigate voter fraud. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

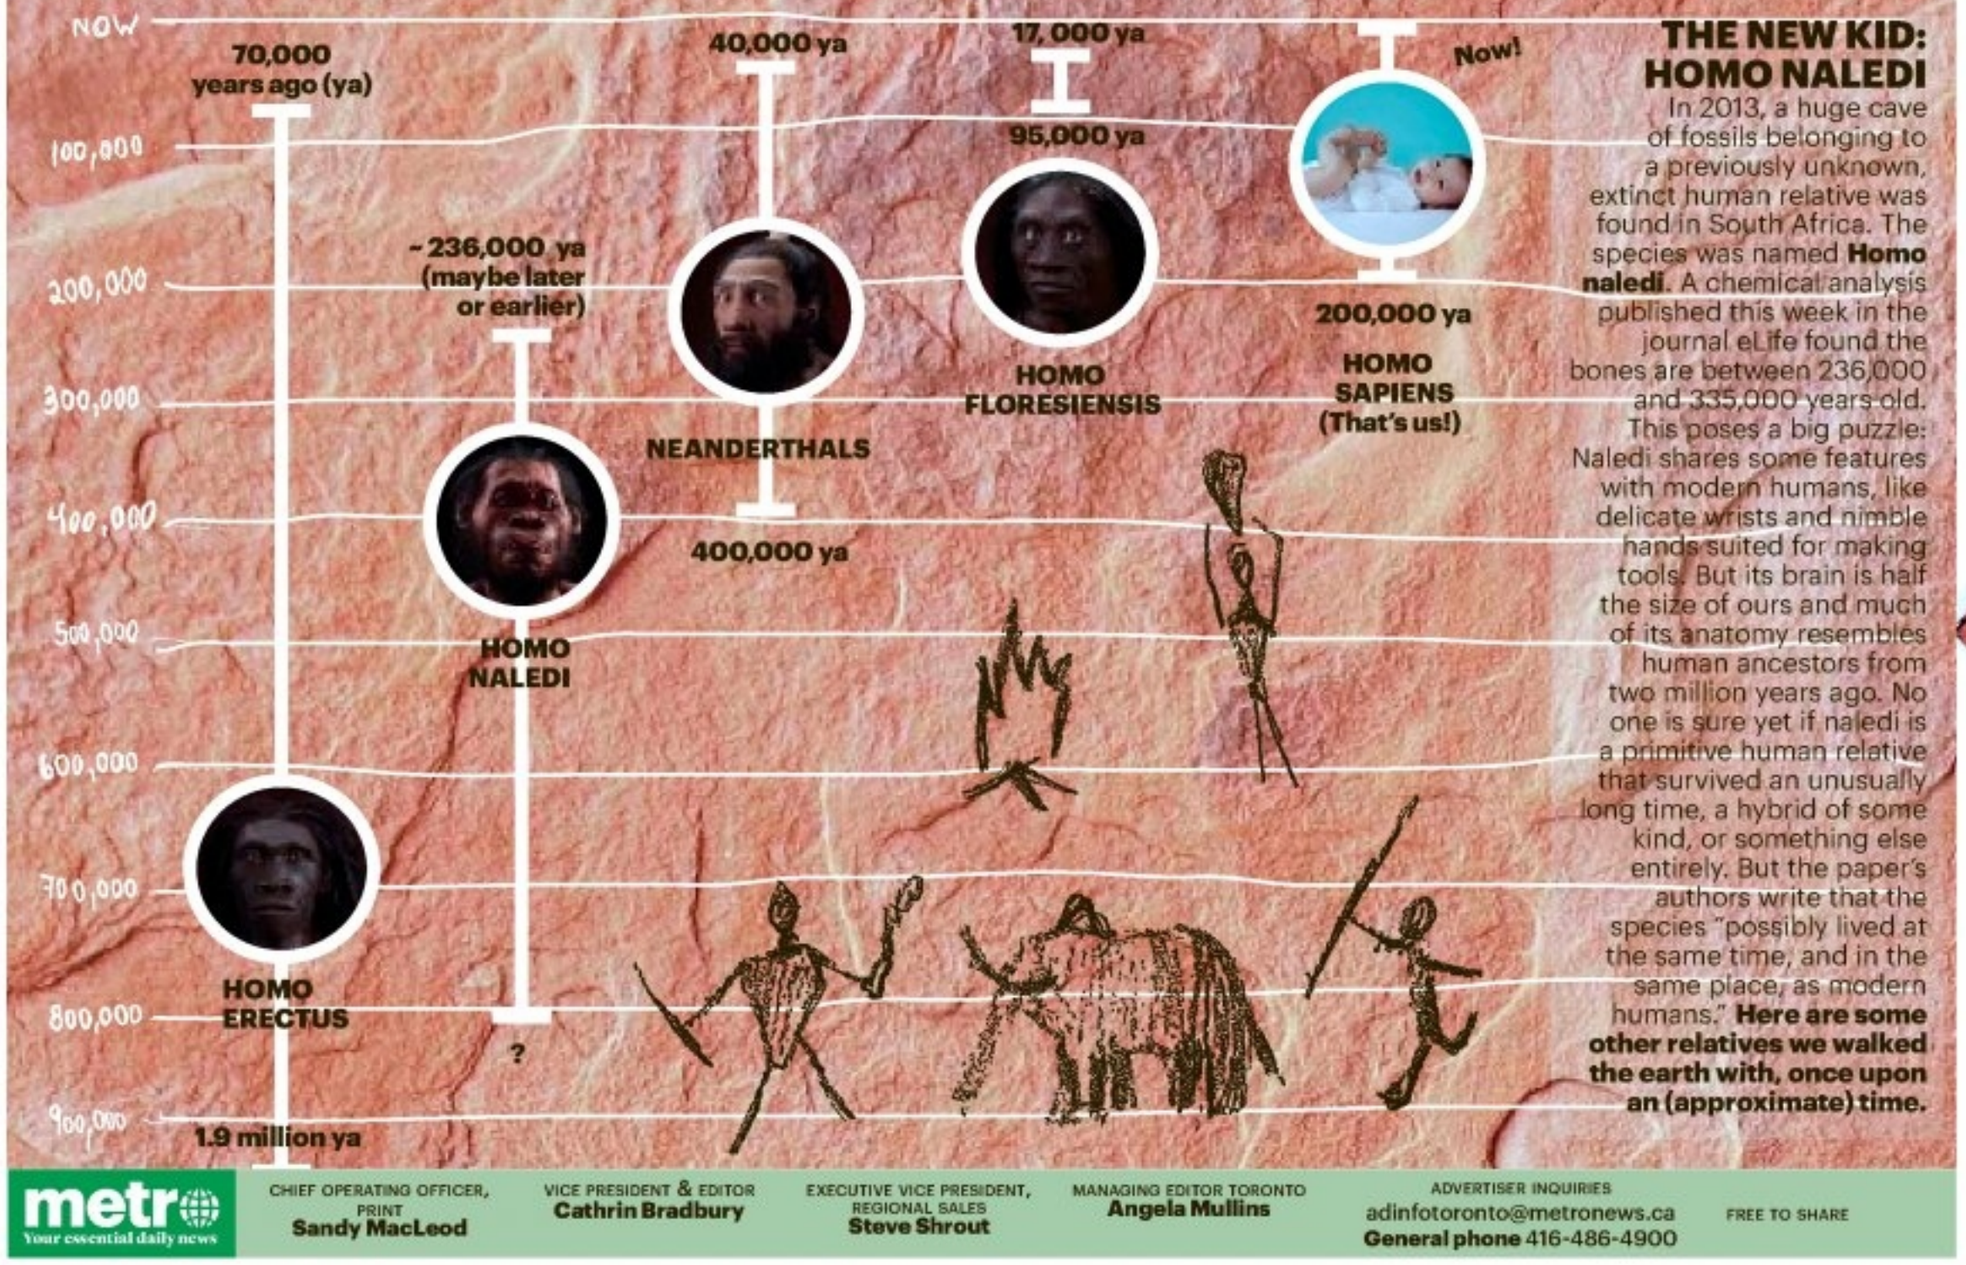
DECODED by Genna Buck and Andrés Plana

THE FANTASTIC HUMAN FAMILY

The "March of Progress" image, where the knuckle-dragging ape transitions to upright modern man, doesn't tell the whole story. For much of our species' history, Homo sapiens co-existed with other close relatives in the genus Homo. Like us, they were tool-makers, fire-controllers, maybe even storytellers. But they weren't us, exactly. And now our family tree has a new branch.



THE NEW KID: HOMO NALEDI

In 2013, a huge cave of fossils belonging to a previously unknown, extinct human relative was found in South Africa. The species was named Homo naledi. A chemical analysis published this week in the journal eLife found the bones are between 236,000 and 335,000 years old. This poses a big puzzle: Naledi shares some features with modern humans, like delicate wrists and nimble hands suited for making tools. But its brain is half the size of ours and much of its anatomy resembles human ancestors from two million years ago. No one is sure yet if naledi is a primitive human relative that survived an unusually long time, a hybrid of some kind, or something else entirely. But the paper's authors write that the species "possibly lived at the same time, and in the same place, as modern humans." Here are some other relatives we walked the earth with, once upon an (approximate) time.

On media duty, King Arthur's main men are sharp as swords

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

Charlie Hunnam (right) is the yang to his King Arthur director Guy Ritchie's yin — when it comes to promotional work. CONTRIBUTED

Guy Ritchie's films have entertained me for years but I'm afraid he didn't find me very interesting.

The incident happened during my press day with Ritchie and Charlie Hunnam, the director and star of King Arthur: Legend of the Sword. I first spoke with them for television. Hunnam answered my opening question about the film Excalibur, a precursor to their movie, enthusiastically. But I could feel Ritchie disengage. He sat back and went into autopilot, answering my questions by rote. The rest of the interview flew by in a flurry of quips and tossed off answers.

Half-an-hour later I sat with them again to do a longer interview for print.

"I'm glad we can make amends," said Hunnam as I came in the room. "It seemed like you wanted to have a proper conversation and we were having a bit of a jolly up."

The whole experience was an example of the yin and yang of movie promotion. The yin was Ritchie, an intense man who refers to the walking a red carpet as "a dog and pony show" before adding that's not what he's here for.

The yang is Hunnam, an engaging actor who said, "We don't make these things to live on in obscurity, we make them with the hope that people will see them and this is one of the ways we can help manifest that."

The duo have been all over the world talking to media people with perfectly coiffed hair and big smiles, answering the same questions on repeat. By the time I get them there's nothing new to ask about their update of the Arthurian legend. But there is an unspoken contract between my interview subjects and me.

Whether it's for television or for the paper you hold in your hands, the deal is the same. They say something interesting and I report it. They get publicity and I get a story that my audience will hopefully enjoy.

As Ritchie sat with his arms folded across his chest, I thought about our "contract" and the difference between the two men.

Despite his tabloid appeal — for a time the British press made a sport of reporting on him — Ritchie strikes me as a private person. He's more interested in what he'll be working on next than the film he spent years making and has now signed off on. Or perhaps it's that, as a director, he's used to being in control and in these situations he has to cede power to the interviewer.

"We both know why we're doing it," Ritchie says, "but the red carpet last night, I'll tell you, I felt soulless after that. After ten minutes get me off there because it takes me hours to recover."

Hunnam, the performer, is immediately warm and open. When Ritchie talks about losing patience on press days Hunnam jokes, "Guy Ritchie leaves the room and Johnny Nasty shows up."

Luckily, Johnny Nasty never showed. By the end of our time together the ice broke, Ritchie's arms unfolded and he smiled. I'm not sure what happened other than he seemed to warm up to me when we talked generally about film and not specifically about King Arthur.

We traded stories, discussed King Arthur, an actor's connection to their director and not being imprisoned by fear. Maybe it was just me but for a moment it felt like we were talking over a beer in a bar and not fulfilling our respective contractual duties. It was, in his words, a little less of a dog and pony show.

"I feel more satisfied now,' said Hunnam as I left and another press person walked into the room to repeat the process. "I really felt bad after the [television] interview [with you]. I thought, 'Man, that's a serious cat and we really just f–ed around for four minutes.' I'm glad we got into some of the nitty-gritty."

Hollywood's quiet leading man

INTERVIEW

Why Brendan Gleeson loves variety after 25 years in film

Steve Gow
For Metro Canada

Brendan Gleeson doesn't have the hassles of most Hollywood leading men. Bulky, gruff-looking and beaming a thick Irish brogue, the acclaimed thespian rarely even gets approached in public.

"The Harry Potter thing was just such a huge thing I suppose," admitted the man behind the fantasy franchises' Mad-Eye Moody. "But luckily enough, I was in enough get-up that people don't recognize me immediately."

Gleeson hasn't just averted the public's attention through prosthetics and extensive make-up however.

After starring in over 50 movies as everything from a Newfoundland fisherman to Winston Churchill, the versatile artist has disappeared into so many roles that he's become one of cinema's most sought-after character actors.

"I have to be honest with you, I bore myself," admitted Gleeson about his extensive range of characters. "I'm 25 years doing it so I'm sure I'm repeating myself (but) I love variety, I like the difference and finding out things. I like to be confronted with stuff I don't already know."

For his latest project, Gleeson certainly learned a lot about a slice of history previously unknown to him. After all, Alone in Berlin cast the renowned actor as a German factory worker who covertly became a Nazi protester after the death of his son in the Second World War.

"I do think that World War II is a place that would benefit from being muddied up a little bit in the sense that not everybody was a hero or a villain," explained Gleeson of the moral drama about a remarkable real-life couple that opposed Nazism by placing propagandist postcards around Berlin opposing Hitler.

While the couple's dissension may have had limited success in the history books, their futile struggle against the Nazi regime was not lost on Gleeson.

"I'm a great believer in the fact that given the chance, a human being wishes to be a decent one and the more we can look at somebody like the Quangels, it's an inspiration," said Gleeson about the film's fictional version of Otto and Elise Hampel.

"The apparent ineffectiveness of the protest, I think that's a bigger statement because it means that they were adhering to what was best of themselves."

It wasn't just the Hampels' tale that appealed to Gleeson however.

After a quarter of a century of moviemaking, the 62-year-old talent is also beginning to feel a personal responsibility to relate stories of the past to younger generations.

Gleeson himself has four sons, two of whom have followed his career path. Eldest son Domhnall has reeled off a string of strong performances in major hits including The Revenant, The Force Awakens and Brooklyn.

Brendan Gleeson sees plenty of modern parallels in his new World War II drama Alone in Berlin. CONTRIBUTED

"I'm not sure their world will be different from that world for too much longer the way things are going," laughs Gleeson of the next generation.

"(But in) World War II, there's a certain innocence in terms of the goodies and the baddies that allows us to watch heroism without having to feel like we have to second guess it.

"Wars now are so complicated in terms of the right and the wrong that it's very difficult to find unsullied heroism."

REVIEW

Humour ends up snatched

Imagine the Hollywood pitch meeting where adventure comedy Snatched got the green light.

Filmmaker: "Amy Schumer and Goldie Hawn, together at last! Two generations, two funny ladies! Goldie is ending her 15-year screen retirement for this!"

Studio suit: "But the script has them being kidnapped for ransom money in South America by very bad hombres! This actually happens to people!"

The movie earns a few chuckles, but humour is largely held hostage by a lewd and lazy screenplay that wanders like Billy in The Family Circus.

The abrupt manner in which characters come and go suggests a lot of effort and editing was expended to keep Snatched from getting too grim. And the two leads aren't exactly a comedy match made in heaven.

Snatched isn't very funny, but at least it's broad-minded about its boorishness.

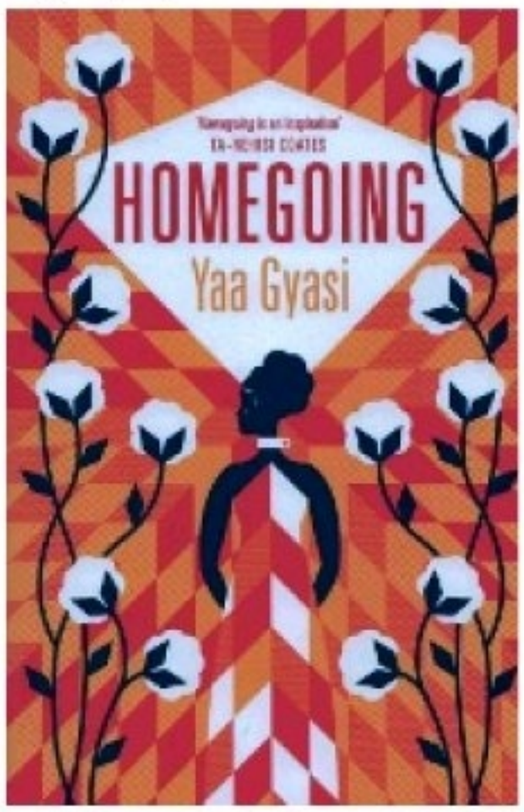
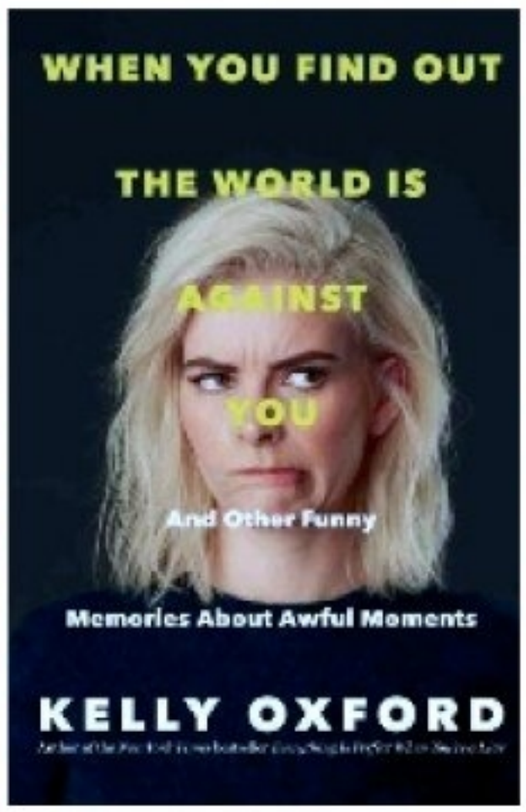
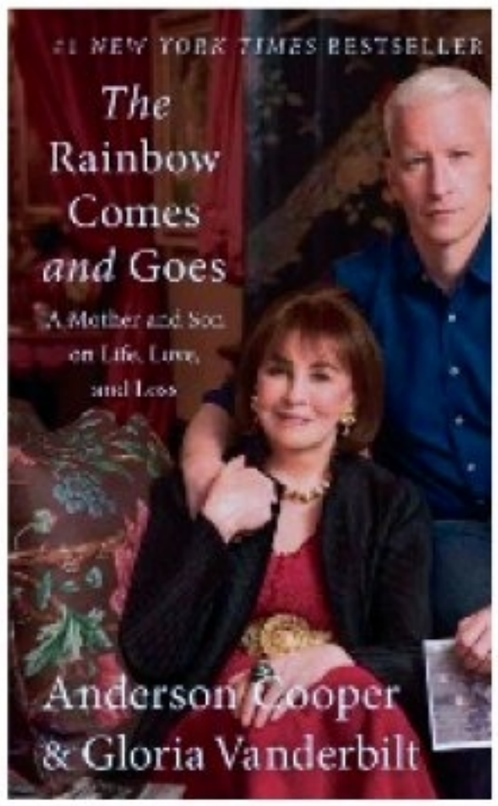
Literary picks for mom, the bookworm

Jaclyn Tersigni

Amongst this crop of recently published books by moms, for moms and about moms, you'll find a book to suit the voracious bookworm, the leader of the book club, or the poolside page-turner.







When You Find Out the World Is Against You by Kelly Oxford
Funny woman Kelly Oxford is back with her second collection of essays, filled with the sort of razor-sharp and hilarious anecdotes and observations that first catapulted the Calgary mom to Twitter fame — and to a new life in Los Angeles — years ago. Available at Indigo and Amazon.ca; $15.99-$46.23.

It All Begins with Food by Leah Garrad-Cole
For new moms and mothers of young children, Leah Garrad-Cole's book is a rich resource for creating delicious and wholesome meals that teach an appreciation for healthy living. The author knows her stuff; she's the founder of Love Child Organics, the highly successful maker of healthy snacks for kids and babies. Available at Indigo and Amazon.ca; $16.99-$28.39.

Dear Ijeawele, or A Feminist Manifesto in Fifteen Suggestions by Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie
When an old friend reached out for advice on how to best raise her daughter as a feminist, Nigerian author Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie responded with a letter detailing 15 ideas. Now, Adichie has turned those suggestions into a thoughtful manifesto for parents seeking to raise empowered, feminist daughters — and sons. Available at Indigo and Amazon.ca; $9.99-$11.40.

The Rainbow Comes and Goes by Anderson Cooper and Gloria Vanderbilt
In this deeply intimate collection of personal correspondence, the famous mother-and-son duo discuss their lives with incredible candor, revealing their unique bond and their distinctive personalities. Mom may need tissues for this one. Available at Indigo and Amazon.ca; $11.99-$26.70.

Homegoing by Yaa Gyasi
Homecoming tells the story of Effia and Esi, two half-sisters who, born into different villages in 18th century Ghana, are unknown to one another and are cast on different trajectories that lead to disparate lives. Yaa Gyasi's masterful debut novel weaves together themes of love, race, history, geography and familial bonds. Available at Indigo and Amazon.ca; $13.99-$42.01.

Remember the movie Avatar? Disney sure hopes you do

Cameron has been promising sequels since the original, but elease dates have been pushed back again. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

You may not have thought much about the 2009 movie Avatar over the past eight years, but Disney sure has.

The Magic Kingdom is wagering a reported half-billion dollars that you and zillions of other people will line up for new theme park attractions based on the movie's bioluminescent world of Pandora.

It's a major gamble, even by Disney standards. While the movie smashed box-office records thanks to its dazzling 3D effects and higher 3D ticket prices, it's also left little but a fading echo in pop-culture consciousness.

"I've never seen anybody ever walking down street wearing an Avatar t-shirt," says Martin Lewison, a theme park expert and business management professor at Farmingdale State College in New York. "There's no real emotional connection with Avatar among the public despite the movie being so popular."

Cultural plunder

But theme parks are big business, and Disney is counting on what its executives call Avatar Land (the official name is Pandora: World of Avatar) to help keep that engine humming.

In the fiscal year that ended in October, parks and resorts accounted for 31 per cent of Disney's nearly $56 billion U.S. in revenue.

Disney also wants to prove it can turn its newer cultural properties, which include Star Wars and the Marvel superhero franchise, into popular theme-park attractions. In that, it's basically playing catch-up with rival Universal Studios, which launched a hugely successful Harry Potter theme park in 2010.

Now the big question is whether Disney can pull that off with Avatar Land, or if it's just chasing unobtainium. (Yes, that's an Avatar reference. See?)

Odd property

James Cameron, the mercurial director famous for Titanic and several other blockbusters, has been promising Avatar sequels almost since the original premiered. One had been in development since 2010. Disney licensed the park rights in 2011, when a sequel didn't seem that far off.

Little did Disney know. In 2013, Cameron announced his intention to film three follow-on films simultaneously, for release starting in 2016. But the date was pushed back until 2017, then 2018.

In March, Cameron said 2018 was "not happening." In April, he announced the start of production on four sequels now scheduled to roll out from 2020 to 2025.

That left Disney to plunge ahead on its own with Avatar Land, which opens May 27 at Disney's Animal Kingdom theme park in Florida. If all goes well, the park "will promote the films and the new films will of course circle back and promote the land," Lewison says.

Beating Harry Potter

One big reason the Walt Disney Co. has pushed ahead with Avatar Land — not to mention Star Wars-themed attractions scheduled to open in 2019 — is the rising threat posed by Universal's The Wizarding World of Harry Potter.

In 2015, about 138 million people visited Walt Disney Attractions, up nearly three per cent from the prior year. Universal Parks and Resorts saw less than a third as many visitors — 45 million — but that figure was up nearly 12 per cent, according to the trade group Theme Entertainment Association.

"What Harry Potter did was to become a big public success and financial one as well," says John Gerner, managing director of theme park consulting firm Leisure Business Advisors. "It really set a new bar for our industry." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Faced with a blockbuster that hardly left an impression, Disney is focussing on the landscape and wildlife of Pandora — rather than characters —to sell the rides. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Discover bluefin tuna fishing in P.E.I.

ADVENTURE

The province is the bluefin tuna capital of the world

Jennifer Bain
For Metro Canada

A fisherman catches a bluefin tuna off the coast of Prince Edward Island. JENNIFER BAIN/TORSTAR

Things get rowdy on the Shine Shack at 10:55 a.m., two hours into our private tuna charter on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The fish finder goes berserk. There's a tuna nearby. Captain Gerard Holland rips open a cardboard box filled with a bag of herring. He and first mate Jamie Hebert toss pieces of dead, stinky fish overboard to tempt the tuna.

It's windy so guts and scales fly back and get tangled in my hair. Fishing. You either love it or you just don't get it.

"Most people, the average Joe, just want a whale-watching tour," allows Holland. "Catching a tuna can be a long, hard process."

People come from all over to fish here in the bluefin tuna capital of the world. Today, three friends from Drummondville, Quebec have booked with Wicked Sea Adventures.

First, we put out lines and troll for mackerel. They go into buckets filled with water until needed as live bait. When the tuna alarm beeps, the mackerel lines come up and three custom tuna fishing rods are let out with live bait on the hooks.

"I'd like to get a 1,000 pound one today," admits Hebert. "Call the wife and kids, tell them to come to the shore, watch the crane, get pictures."

Tuna charters in Prince Edward Island are usually catch-and-release. Unbeknownst to us, today is supposed to be different.

Holland pays upwards of $40,000 a year for the right to run catch-and-release charters and keep one tuna a year. Today, he figures, will be the day to tow the tuna back to the dock, have a crane lift it to be weighed, and then entertain offers from North American buyers or send it to Japan on consignment.

"There's a fish right there," Holland yells at 11:19 a.m. He has been tracking a "boil" — sort of a swell or wave — beside the boat. We rush to the side of the Shine Shack and peer at the sea.

"We'll have a hookup by the end of the day," vows Holland using local slang for a tuna on the line.

By noon, things quiet down. Fish eat big meals in the morning and evening and retreat from the bright, midday sun.

"Tuna fishing is kind of like bear hunting," opines Holland. "It can be hours of boredom and seconds of terror."

I may never know. I've got a flight to catch and can't risk missing it for a tuna. The captain runs me to shore, mumbling: "I hate to take people in without a fish." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Shaking up France's transport monopoly

TRANSPORTATION

Travellers on the A10 out of Paris weigh in on cheap ride

They're dubbed the Macron buses, cheap long-distance rides across France that were among Emmanuel Macron's few notable achievements before his meteoric rise to the French presidency — part of his efforts to loosen up France's monopoly-bound transport sector and invigorate the economy.

A ride on one such bus on the A10 highway out of Paris shows how the president-elect might try to change the country after his inauguration on Sunday.

The ride took place on a national holiday — so most French businesses were closed and the streets of the capital were empty. The bus was an exception. Fully booked, it was heading to Orleans, Poitiers, all the way south to France's famous wine region of Bordeaux.

Some on the bus were heading home after a weekend in Paris. Others were visiting family. All had one thing in common: a cheap ticket.

"I find it good. Competition brings down prices, we see it with Uber taxis," said Anthony Coste, a 24-year-old sales manager returning to Bordeaux after three years in Paris. A train ticket to Bordeaux would have set him back more than $104 — but his ticket with bus company Ouibus cost only $37.

Macron became a household name as economy minister because of a controversial 2015 work reform law. One of its most famous measures removed restrictions on new bus lines to increase competition and lower prices, nicknamed "transport for the poor."

The so-called Macron Law, the 39-year-old's keystone achievement, has a mixed legacy. It aimed mainly to free up France's notoriously inflexible labour rules but was opposed by many on the left and provoked widespread protests.

Some 6.2 million people took Macron buses to get around in the year after the law, according to the National Federation of National Travelers. However, the law fell dramatically short of its goal of creating 22,000 jobs, according to French media.

Megabus, one of the Macron Law companies, went bust in 2016. And some see such budget services as a symbol of the erosion of France's worker-friendly labour model.

Dubbed Macron buses after the president-elect, these cheap long-distance rides in France are a controversial part of efforts to loosen up the monopolized sector. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"It represents this Uberization. We're willing to pay less and give up good service," said Pierre France, a 29-year-old researcher taking the bus to Poitiers. "It's an economic choice that we make purely based on cost, because it's much cheaper, but without thinking about the long-term consequences."

But he acknowledged the law has its benefits. A frequent traveller, he's encountered people from low-income communities on bus trips who wouldn't have been able to travel otherwise.

One of the most noticeable — and controversial — points of the Macron Law aimed to relax the strict rules that closed French stores on Sunday and in the evening, especially in tourist areas. Macron's law has left an indelible mark on tourist spots around France, from the Normandy seaside town of Deauville to the glitz of Paris' Champs-Elysees. In major department stores, an agreement was made with powerful workers' unions that gave employees perks for working on Sunday.

Conversely, pro-business conservatives argue the changes were too incremental, not fundamental enough to fix an economy with chronically high unemployment.

Other than the labour law, in terms of Macron's political legacy, so far there's relatively little to go on, as the former banker has never held elected office.

His biggest impact on France has arguably been the ideological implosion of the French left.

White nixes GSP fight

UFC president Dana White has pulled the plug on Georges St-Pierre's comeback fight against middleweight champion Michael Bisping.

St-Pierre, who has not fought since November 2013, says he is ready to fight after October. White says that's too late.

"I made this GSP fight, we did a press conference. The thing was supposed to happen in July. Michael Bisping is going to have to defend his title now. We're not waiting for GSP," White told Fox Sports Australia ahead of this Saturday's UFC 211 in Dallas.

The 35-year-old St-Pierre last fought in November 2013.

When the Montrealer's return was announced in February, the UFC said the Bisping-GSP fight would take place in the second half of the year.

Georges St-Pierre GETTY IMAGES

St-Pierre offered his own take on that in a social media video posting last Friday.

"Mr Bisping, I cleared my entire schedule to get ready for training camp after the summer. So I can fight you any time after October. You pick the date. Let's get it on."

Bullish with the 'pen

JAYS' AILING ARMS
Richard Griffin

Less than 24 hours after left-hander Francisco Liriano managed to record just six outs in a failed start versus the Indians on Wednesday, the 33-year-old was placed on the Blue Jays' 10-day disabled list with inflammation in his left shoulder. He gave up seven runs in two-plus innings and is now 2-2, with a 6.35 ERA.

Toronto's five-man rotation was projected as the strength of this Jays team heading into the season. The caveat is there was little in the way of ready-for-prime-time backup starters in the minors.

Health of the rotation was seen as a key to any success. That's why it has become so alarming to management that Liriano has joined J.A. Happ (left elbow) and Aaron Sanchez (blister) as starters currently on the DL. Sanchez, of course, has been there twice, with blister and nail problems to his middle finger.

The Seattle Mariners, who have four injured starters of their own, claimed right-hander Casey Lawrence on waivers from the Jays. Lawrence started two games for the Jays earlier in the season. Toronto brass hoped they would be able to sneak him through waivers and return him to the Buffalo rotation as insurance.

> Sometimes you just have to get through the game.
> Jays manager John Gibbons

"We've said many times, we were pretty lucky the last couple of years," manager John Gibbons said of the health of his starters. "This year it's hitting us, but that's why we're carrying some extra (relief pitchers) now. Those guys, you just hope you don't end up abusing anybody."

And yes, it's been a reshaped Blue Jays bullpen that has saved much of the hope for the future. It took a while for Gibbons and his staff to understand the new pieces in relief and what optimum roles might be.

Consider starting pitchers have failed to go at least five innings 10 times in the first 34 games. The Jays were 1-6 in the first seven failed starts, but have won the last three in a row in which the relievers have pitched the majority of innings.

Francisco Liriano THE CANADIAN PRESS

"Generally what happens is at the start of the season you have some ideas of how you may want to use guys," Gibbons said. "Guys pitch their way into certain roles and vice-versa. And when you have a new group, a lot of new faces, you have to experiment a little bit. You know the value of spring training. You never usually get a true read anyway. You think you do and then things change."

The Jays' pen has logged more innings than any AL team, with Roberto Osuna regaining his mojo, Joe Smith as the new setup and with guys like Danny Barnes, Dominic Leone and Ryan Tepera eating up important innings in the middle.

Gibbons has been proud of the compete level, even when losing. Much of that is the bullpen being able to keep them close through middle innings. Tepera sees the same light down the track as the end of the tunnel approaches.

"You have to see it," he insisted. "We're fighting. We're battling. We have some big injuries. A lot of our offensive guys are coming back soon and that is just going to be another step in the right way. Lately we've been throwing well as a bullpen. We've had some stuff go down as starters, whatever. Hopefully they all get healthy but we're just going to roll with it. We're going the right way."

"Sometimes you just have to get through the game," Gibbons simplified the goal. "You map it out and you're probably going to need everybody or damn near everybody, if that (starter) comes out early. The game's so different now. Basically nearly everybody's a one-inning guy."

The Ultimate Coconut Chocolate Banana Bread

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

The search is over! This loaf is the ultimate banana bread combining loads of chocolate, flakey coconut and slivered almonds.

Ready in1 hour and 10 minutes
Prep time: 15 minutes
Cook time: 55 minutes
Makes: 1 loaf

Ingredients
- 1/2 cup unsalted butter (1 stick)
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 3 bananas, mashed
- 4 tbsp almond milk
- 2 cups spelt flour
- 1 tsp baking powder
- 1/2 tsp baking soda
- 1/2 tsp salt
- 1/2 cup chocolate chips
- 1/4 cup slivered almonds
- 1/4 cup unsweetened flaked coconut

Directions

1. Preheat your oven to 350 and grease a 9x5 inch loaf pan.

2. Set aside. Cream butter and sugar with a hand blender or stand mixer. Add one egg. Mix in mashed bananas and almond milk.

3. In a separate bowl, whisk flour, baking powder, baking soda and salt. Add flour mixture in stages to butter mix incorporated after each addition. Fold in the chips, coconut and almond slivers. Pour into prepared baking pan; tapping pan down to make sure it's evenly distributed.

4. Bake in the oven for 50 to 55 minutes or until a toothpick inserted into the centre comes out clean. Cool on a rack for a few minutes. Turn out of pan and store in a plastic bag for up to a week.

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
You are so enthusiastic that you can sell anything to anyone today — your words are like gold! This is a great day for those of you who sell, market, teach, act, write or drive for a living.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
"There's money in them thar hills!" Oh yes, your enthusiasm will attract money to you today. You will do well in all financial negotiations. Ka-ching!

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You can take it to the bank today, because you are powerful. No matter what you do, you will come out smelling like a rose. Use this strong energy for creating good in the world around you.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
You appreciate the behind-the-scenes support you get from others at this time. Something good and beneficial will come from this. Look for ways to make this happen.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Your ability to deal with others today, especially in groups, is stellar! Today you are a natural leader, which is why everyone will take their cue from you. Ah, maestro!

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Today your ambition is aroused. You will act with skillful means, which is why this is an excellent day to talk to bosses, parents, teachers, VIPs and the police. You look like a winner!

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
This is a fast-paced day full of detours and exciting changes! Even your mind is full of quickly changing thoughts and clever ideas.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Travel plans totally appeal to you today. This is the perfect day to discuss matters related to publishing, the media, medicine, the law and higher education.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You couldn't pick a better day to discuss inheritances and shared property because everyone probably will be fair; nevertheless, you are in a winning position. Oh, yes! Do something.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You will be extremely productive at work today. You have great energy and wonderful intuition about how to use it to get the most bang for your buck. You also feel healthy and vigorous!

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
This is the perfect day for a vacation. It's also a great day to schmooze with your friends and enjoy social outings, sports events and playful activities with children.

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Whatever you do at home today will bring about positive results for you. Likewise, this is an excellent day to pursue real-estate deals.
